“ For the first 7 years of my life, Georgia was my next-door neighbor and essentially part of my family. Our families took wonderful vacations to Michigan (to "the cabin") and Florida (Disney and Epcot), had countless backyard cookouts, visits to each other's grandparents' houses, and numerous shared holiday celebrations. One especially fond memory is of our Hawaiian-themed Christmas party. I remember Georgia as an adventurous cook, making homemade yogurt and food my family never made. I also remember Georgia's love of cats, and also of a racoon who visited their back deck for many years looking for food. Although years and miles have separated our families for the past few decades, I will always remember Georgia as a kind of second mother when I was little, and treasure the years our families got to share.
