“ Driving down 101st today, my husband pointed and said “remember Gordon?”. I smiled but couldn’t help but notice the large arch with the name Reynolds was missing. I realized that it had been awhile since I seen him last. So I searched his name in google and was sad to see he had gone to be with his loved ones. How did I know Gordon? Simple- I met him repeatedly at stores in the area. I remember the first time was at Menards. My husband and I turned down an aisle he was in, we smiled and nodded. Gordon lifted the jars of jam in his hand and said, “my wife and I buy these and when they’re empty we clean them out and use them for chocolate milk for the grandkids”. I told him that was a great idea and then we all conversed a bit more. About a week later I was in Walmart when we ran into each other again, more conversation. This continued for years after. Our conversations were random and filled with a variety of subjects. From my boys, husband, the times among us, and everything in between. One of the times we mentioned the areas we lived in which is when I came to know that the Reynolds sign was where he called home. I had passed it so many times. Through the many run ins and conversations, one thing that he spoke about most often was his grandchildren, his own kids, and his wife. He came across as so proud of his family. I’ll miss running into him. Sorry for your loss....Tricia Pitts

“ Gordon D. Reynolds was my Father in Law. I called him "Sir" when we first met, and he became Sir Dad. He was the most patient and meticulous man I have ever met. He never judged, and was always encouraging. He always gave me a sense that he was proud of me, my two sons, and my choice of serving in the military. One of my fondest memories is the time he spent with me riding the ship back on a Tiger cruise, when I was returning from deployment. I loved the way he interacted with my two sons. He played video games, and tried to learn the latest technology with them, even though he really didn't like technology. I loved you Sir. We will meet again. Fair winds, and following Seas.

Love forever,
Joe
