“ On several occasions, Mrs. Kopchik's son John would be winding up his phone conversations with his mom, when I, as John's oblivious college roommate, would be suddenly handed the phone. I had an idea of appropriate niceties to relate to Mrs. Kopchik as a dutiful classmate, yet we spoke of many things--much more than I would expect her to know about me (some factual but mostly fiction-- as related to her by John himself). As I would try to set the record straight with Mrs. Kopchik, she would always assure me that, "everything's OK", and that I was a "good boy"--I certainly thought that this was in spite of the tall tales spilled to her by her son John and reflective of her deep trust and faith in the goodness of humanity while praying for me and my wayward soul forever.....As I would squirm in my chair deflecting the mythical bio to be reflective of some semblance of reality, Mrs. Kopchik would always close the conversation by asking me to "take care of my Johnny". ...

She saw the greatest goodness in all people. She was a kind and welcoming. She will be missed. MP
