“ I remember the red room upstairs with the red carpet and the jaguar head and the throw that had eyes that would seemingly watch you when you walked. I remember her voice and the smell of her house. I remember how the trains shook the house and that was my first experience being in a house that close to the tracks. I remember going outside to play with her dog in the backyard, and the Beanie Baby wall that, when I was a kid, was absolutely awe inspiring. I remember the million magnets on her fridge from all sorts of different places. I remember she was always very nice to me. I have nothing but good, solid memories of my great grandmother and her place, and that's what I will always have when I think of her. Rest in graceful peace.
